CRP
COACHING
CONSISTENCY. RESULTS. PURPOSE

FREE GUIDE

PLATEAU BREAKER

What to do when the scales stop moving: find out why you've stalled and get your fat loss going again.

BY CRAIG RHYS PRICE
Online Fitness Coach · CRP Coaching

PART 1

IS IT REALLY A PLATEAU?

Before you change anything, make sure you've actually stalled. The scales measure everything in your body, not just fat, so they can stay still or even go up while you're still losing fat.

Water and salt

A salty meal or a takeaway can hold on to water and add 1–2 kg overnight.

Carbs

Eating more carbs than usual stores extra water with them in your muscles.

Hormones

Many women hold more water at certain points of their cycle, and during perimenopause this can be less predictable.

Stress and sleep

A stressful week or poor sleep can make you hold water and mask fat loss.

New training

Starting new exercise or lifting heavier can cause temporary water retention while your muscles recover.

Digestion

Simply what's still in your gut can change the number from day to day.

THE 3-WEEK RULE

Only call it a plateau if your weekly average weight, your waist measurement and your photos haven't changed for 3 weeks or more. If any of them are moving, you're not stuck, so keep going.

PART 2

WHY YOU'VE STALLED

If it's been 3 weeks or more with no change, one of these is almost always the reason. Most people have two or three of them at once, and none of them mean you've failed.

1

Portion creep

Portions slowly get bigger over time. A bit more rice, a heavier pour of oil, a bigger handful of nuts: it adds up without you noticing.

2

The weekend effect

Spot-on Monday to Friday, then Saturday and Sunday quietly wipe out the week's deficit.

3

Liquid calories

Lattes, juices, smoothies and alcohol are easy to forget, but they count just as much as food.

4

Moving less

As you lose weight and feel tired from dieting, you naturally move less during the day. Fewer steps means fewer calories burned.

5

Your body needs less

A smaller body burns less energy, so what worked at the start of your journey may now be closer to maintenance.

6

Not enough protein or sleep

Low protein means more hunger and less muscle; poor sleep means more cravings and less energy to train.

THE GOOD NEWS

Every one of these is fixable. You don't need to eat less and train more. You just need to find your leak and plug it.

PART 3

THE 7-DAY HONEST AUDIT

For one week, track everything without changing anything. This isn't about judging yourself. It's about finding the leak. Tick each one off every day.

- [ ] Log every bite
  Including the bites, licks and tastes: kids' leftovers, biscuits at work, a few crisps.
- [ ] Weigh your food
  Use kitchen scales for the basics like rice, pasta, cereal, oil, nut butter and cheese.
- [ ] Log every drink
  Coffees, juices, smoothies, alcohol and mixers.
- [ ] Count the weekend
  Saturday and Sunday count just as much as weekdays.
- [ ] Check your steps
  Note your daily step count from your phone or watch.
- [ ] Note your sleep
  Roughly how many hours you slept each night.
- [ ] Weigh in daily
  First thing in the morning, after the toilet. Use the weekly average, not any single day.

AT THE END OF THE WEEK

Look back and ask: where are the surprises? Most people find their leak straight away, whether it's the weekend, the drinks, the portions or the steps.

PART 4

THE FIXES

Pick the one or two fixes that match what your audit found. Change one thing at a time so you know what's working.

Move more first

Add about 2,000 steps a day before cutting any food. A 15–20 minute walk after meals is an easy way to get there.

Tighten portions

Go back to weighing or using the palm rule for a couple of weeks to reset your eye.

Fix the weekend

Plan your weekend meals in advance, keep your protein high, and pick one treat meal instead of a treat weekend.

Cut the liquid calories

Swap to water, diet drinks, black coffee or skinny lattes, and set a drink limit for the week.

Protein at every meal

A palm-sized portion of protein at each meal keeps you full and protects your muscle.

Lift a little heavier

Add a little weight or an extra rep each week. Building strength keeps your metabolism working for you.

Small trim, not a crash diet

If you're still stuck, make one small cut, like a smaller carb portion at dinner. Never slash your food hard.

Protect your sleep

Aim for 7–8 hours. Better sleep means fewer cravings and better training.

BEEN DIETING FOR 3+ MONTHS?

A planned 1–2 week break, eating at maintenance with high protein, can help you recover mentally and come back to your deficit feeling fresh.

PART 5

YOUR 14-DAY PLATEAU-BREAKER PLAN

Two weeks, two jobs: find the leak, then fix it. Tick each step off as you go.

WEEK 1: FIND IT

Day 1	Measure your waist and take photos	☐
Days 1–7	Do the 7-day audit from Part 3	☐
Daily	Weigh in each morning	☐
Daily	Hit your normal training	☐
Day 7	Work out your weekly average weight	☐
Day 7	Spot your leak or leaks	☐

WEEK 2: FIX IT

Day 8	Choose 1–2 fixes from Part 4	☐
Daily	Add about 2,000 steps	☐
Daily	Protein at every meal	☐
Weekend	Stick to one treat meal	☐
Day 14	Re-measure your waist and photos	☐
Day 14	Compare your weekly averages	☐

STILL STUCK AFTER 14 DAYS?

Keep your fixes going for another two weeks. Fat loss is rarely a straight line, and the people who get results are the ones who don't give up during the slow weeks.

MEET YOUR COACH

CRAIG RHYS PRICE

I'm an online fitness coach helping people over 40 lose fat, get strong and feel confident again, without extreme diets or living in the gym.

I know how frustrating it is to do everything right and watch the scales refuse to move. It's the point where most people give up, just before things would have turned around. A plateau isn't a sign you've failed. It's a sign it's time to adjust, and with the right tweaks your progress will come back.

REMEMBER

Check the trend, find the leak, fix one thing at a time. Slow progress is still progress.

STUCK AND WANT HELP?

My coaching finds what's holding you back and adjusts your plan week by week, with regular check-ins so you never feel on your own.

Message me on Instagram: @crp__coaching

CRP
COACHING
CONSISTENCY. RESULTS. PURPOSE

Instagram: @crp__coaching